

TWELFTH SUMMER SESSION
MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE
THE ENGLISH SCHOOL
AT BREAD LOAF INN

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE will conduct at Bread Loaf Inn, in the heart of the Green Mountains, a special school for students and teachers of ENGLISH, based on the model of Middlebury's well-known foreign language schools.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL will open June 30 and close August 5, 1920, with morning sessions six days a week, afternoons left free for tennis, golf, hikes on the Long Trail or in the adjacent woodlands, summer botanizing, or mountain climbing. Evenings at the Inn will be taken up with lectures, musicals, readings, recitals, and good-fellowship.

THE DEAN of the School will be Professor Charles B. Wright, A. M., Litt.D., who will be assisted by Julian W. Abernethy, Ph.D., Litt.D., author of American Literature, English Literature, and other works; Stanley T. Williams, Ph.D., of Yale University; Charles J. Woodbury, of Oakland, Calif.; Miss Alice N. Spaulding, Secy-Treas. of The 47 Workshop; and by several members of the Middlebury Faculty.

THE COURSES begin a three-year cycle of work, and will include in 1920: Chaucer; Nineteenth Century Poetry; Browning; History and Technique of the Drama; Elementary and Advanced Composition; the Plays of Shakespeare; with much study of the problems of the secondary teacher in presenting literature, the drama, grammar, rhetoric, and composition in the schools, together with drill in speaking and dramatic interpretation. Credits for the baccalaureate and master's degrees may be earned.

BREAD LOAF INN is a quaint old hostelry, founded by the late Joseph Battell, which for many years attracted literary visitors. It has an elevation of 1500 feet. The region about the Inn abounds in walks, drives, woodland paths, and mountain scenery. The Green Mountain Trail crosses the height of land a few miles east of the Inn. Pleiad Lodge and Emily Proctor Lodge furnish shelter for overnight camping parties. The Inn is equipped with a music room and theater, bowling alley, and ample parlors for conferences. The board is unsurpassed and the location unrivalled by that of any summer school in America.

RATES. For the Session, including registration, tuition, board, and room—$150.
